In this 8 week, 16 session seminar, you add academic training in spirituality to the practical experience of providing clinical, palliative, and hospice care to those who are dying and those who survive the dying, shifting from best intention to best practices. Insights, best practices, and research-based evidence of the intersectionality of spirituality, psychology, and religion will guide your cohort members to understanding of authentic and compassionate care and action. Take this seminar as part of the Certificate in Mental Health and Spirituality, or by itself to earn continuing education units (CEUs) as you learn to bring spirituality to the moments in death, dying and bereavement.

TOPICS INCLUDE:

- The significance of spirituality in the grieving process
- The existential questions asked by the bereaved
- Approaches to death and grief from a variety of diverse cultures
- The importance of ritual for healing
- Why including spirituality in counseling is critical for working with loss and grief
- How counselors and spiritual care providers can use ritual in their practices

LEARNING OBJECTIVES INCLUDE:

- Understand how religious and spiritual diversity can be effectively addressed in situations of bereavement and how it intersects with other forms of diversity.
- Learn, practice, and develop best practices for hospice and palliative care workers, clergy and spiritual directors, pastors and chaplains, in dealing with issues of grief, bereavement, and survival.
- Learn ways for clergy/spiritual directors and mental health professionals to better collaborate to foster wellness in their patients and congregants.
